Key Insights

Mississippi's African American-owned credit union sector includes 11 active institutions with $1,048,447,070 in total assets and 85,325 members in 2025, led by Hope, which holds $700,210,754 in assets and 39,924 members. This is one of the strongest state profiles in the dataset: several institutions show major gains in assets and membership, and the overall scale suggests a mature Black credit union presence rather than a small niche network. In Mississippi, that means Black-owned credit unions are not just preserving access—they appear to be operating as substantial engines of financial reach, institutional growth, and community-level economic influence.
