Key Insights

South Carolina's African American-owned credit union sector includes 5 active institutions with $163,251,965 in total assets and 18,629 members in 2025, led by Curis Financial, which holds $91,295,846 in assets and 9,675 members. The state shows a blend of scale and spread: two larger institutions account for much of the footprint, while others contribute smaller but still meaningful community presence, with asset growth outpacing membership growth in several cases. Overall, South Carolina appears to have a credible Black credit union base, but one whose future strength may depend on expanding participation, not just growing balance sheets.
